I received a phone call from a parent from Epiphany school concerned about an incident with Monsignor Malor last week. He went to the Junior High building to talk with the eighth grade boys about "morality". He took one class of boys and made the teacher leave and locked the classroom door. He spent about two and a half hours with the boys and told them not to tell any one what they talked about or he would expel them.

The parent was very concerned about retaliation to the children. They also cited two incidents last semester while giving out report cards. One Monsignor got angry with the students and stormed out and didn't give that class report cards for about three days. The other incident was that he gave one student two dollars for their good report card in from of the other students.

Monsignor apparently has his favorites with the girls (blondes). Some parents have called the principal saying their daughters felt uncomfortable with him and didn't want to be alone with him. Prudence hasn't always been practiced.
