

Excerpt from letter of Bishop Gill to Archbishop in Rome, under date of October 14, 1963:

"Father Michael Cody has been giving me a little worry lately. It is not that he is not trying; there are manifest signs of deterioration in his mental health. He has wide mood-swings. He experiences deep depressions, alternated by manic explosions, delusions of importance and grandeur, etc., etc. In the effort to spare him any pressure, we gradually reduced his assignments, and even then recognized that it was not enough. Right now we are allowing him to rest entirely, and have lifted all responsibilities and assignments for a week or two, until he feels better able to pick them up again. I expect it will be sometime before he is in condition to assume even a moderate work load of assistant's work."
