After seeing our John of God story husband reveals to his wife that he was also a victim

FIGHTING BACK: Joe Devine
Joe Devine’s heart-wrenching account of why he broke 35 years of angry silence

Why didn’t you tell me?
The shame: You might not have heard me

By Michael O’Farrell

IT’S BEEN 35 years since Joe Devine has seen Brother Adrian Clemons. The man he lost hope that he would untie the shackles he felt about what he alleged happened in him at St Agatha’s special needs school when he was a child. “It’s too late now. They've never told me anything. I've been in touch with the school’s management. If they had ever said anything, though she always knew something was up. She could tell by the way I acted. Joe was sold on St Agatha’s from the age of twelve onward. They gave me a special education, they gave me everything. They gave me a special education. But when his mother left him nine years ago, she went to the school and they said she was in the special education program. They gave me a special education, but a special education for a special needs student. They gave me nothing. They gave me a special education. They gave me a special education. They gave me a special education. They gave me a special education. They gave me a special education. They gave me a special education. They gave me a special education. They gave me a special education. They gave me a special education. They gave me a special education. They gave me a special education. They gave me a special education. They gave me a special education. They gave me a special education. They gave me a special education. They gave me a special education. They gave me a special education. WHISTLEBLOWER psychiatrist at St John of God says its code of silence endangers children

In an open article for the Irish Mail on Sunday, psychiatrist Dr Michael O’Farrell says there is a "dark culture of silence" in the mental health sector that endangers children. He says that while the hospital’s code of silence is "meaningless", he has referred to an ongoing investigation into the allegations against St John of God.

The article, which is due to be published on January 28, is titled "Retracting Silence: How a Whistleblower at St John of God Challenged the Code of Silence in Mental Health Care".

Dr O’Farrell is the co-founder of the Irish Mental Health Service Providers’ Association, which is a national association that represents the interests of mental health service providers in Ireland. He is also a member of the Irish Mental Health Network, which is an independent network of mental health organizations.

In the article, Dr O’Farrell says that while the code of silence is "meaningless", he has referred to an ongoing investigation into the allegations against St John of God.
