Sponsored by St. Mary's Sacred Arts Program, the icon painting classes begin at 1 p.m. Sunday, Sept. 2, and meet daily at DeCoursey Hall from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. until Friday, Sept. 7.

Students do not need special art training to succeed in this course. They learn such traditional steps as the selection and preparation of proper wood board; mixing egg tempera, the meaning and use of color pigments, applying and burnishing gold leaf, how to apply oil finish and the art and theology of "icon-writing."

Icon means "sacred image." The paintings are sometimes considered to be the first "holy pictures."

The Milwaukee Parental Choice Program, as the Wisconsin law is called, was passed by the state lawmakers in March after being introduced by State Rep. Annette Williams, who was critical of public education in Milwaukee's inner city.

Williams' four children attended Urban Day School in Milwaukee, one of the 10 private schools in the city that applied for eligibility under the legislation she sponsored.

Urban Day School was started by parents more than 20 years ago when St. Benedict the Moor and other schools were closed by the Archdiocese of Milwaukee.

Two other eligible Milwaukee schools have similar histories: Harambee Community School was once St. Elizabeth's, and Bruce-Guadalupe Community School formerly was Holy Trinity and Our Lady of Guadalupe.

In a court challenge to the law, a county circuit judge in Madison upheld it as constitutional. Groups opposing the law have promised to appeal, arguing that public spending on private schools is unconstitutional.
