Abbess-Elect Envisions Great U.S. Benedictine Convent

A gigantic Benedictine convent, a St. Walburga's of the West, is the major hope envisioned by Mother M. Augustina Weihermueller, superior of St. Walburga's convent in South Boulder, as she prepares to return to Germany to assume her position as Lady Abbess at the motherhouse of her community in Eichstaett, Bavaria.

Mother Augustina's departure for Europe is scheduled for the middle of August, possibly Aug. 17 or 18, after she and her companion sisters, and a group of Benedictine nuns from Holy Cross abbey in Canon City, complete their annual retreat, which will be given by the Rev. Paschal Botz, O.S.B., of St. John's abbey, Collegeville, Minn.

Tuesday, Sept. 12, is the date that has been set for her blessing as Abbess at the hands of Bishop Josef Schroesser of Eichstaett. That day is the Feast of the Holy Name of Mary, a name that Mother Augustina bears as a nun. The ceremony will be held in St. Walburga's parish church and the cloistered nuns of the community will witness it from their private choir.

That day, just two months hence, will mark the first time that an American citizen has returned to Europe to assume direction of an Old World nuns' abbey. But Abbess-elect Augustina is not relinquishing her U. S. citizenship. She is obtaining special permission from the U. S. Military government in Germany for exceptional residence in that country. The only requirement is that she periodically, perhaps every five years, spend some time in this country, where she has been for 15 years.

In 1949 when Mother Augustina visited the German mother-house and conferred with the late Lady Abbess Benedicta, whom she has succeeded, among the subjects considered was the possibility of transferring the heart of the order to America if Russia should overrun Europe!

At the great St. Walburga's mother-house in Eichstaett, she will be superior of 130 sisters. The community also has 53 nuns in the U. S., including eight at South Boulder, seven in Canon City, 38 in St. Vincent's archabbey, Latrobe, Pa.; and 10 in England. It is to this German mother-house that the small Colorado community and many of their American neighbors have been sending a stream of relief packages to sustain the sisters there.

Mother Augustina declares that her greatest privilege as Abbess will be as custodian and distributor of the famed St. Walburga oil. This oil exudes from the bones of the saint, who founded the Benedictine community and lived 710-780. Many remarkable cures have been attributed to its use while seeking the intercession of St. Walburga.

Those who have heard Mother Augustina in one of her frequent talks on Theresa Neumann, the stigmatic of Konnerseuth, know that she will readily respond to an invitation she received recently from Theresa to visit her before she assumes her duties as Abbess. The two have known each other for a long time and it was Theresa who predicted a year before it came to pass that Mother Augustina would become the new Abbess. Konnersreuth is about 150 miles

Work Halted on Ten Projects

EXPANSION AND CONSTRUCTION projects of Catholic institutions have stood idle since the beginning of the two-month construction strike in Denver and erection of two churches and a rectory was not even started, according to a survey of the situation as it affects church construction.

Because contractors are unwilling to commit themselves until the situation clears, two pastors, Monsignor Charles H. Hagus and the Rev. Louis Mertz, have not been able to put out for bids the plans for new churches in Swansea and Aurora. The proposed Our Lady of Grace church in Swansea, cared for by the priests of the Annunciation parish, would have been well on the way if building could have started before the strike was called, according to Monsignor Hagus. Ground was broken, but the work stoppage came before foundations could be excavated.

PROJECTS ON WHICH CONSTRUCTION had started included a new wing at the Cathedral high school, the new St. Peter and Paul's church in Wheatridge, Mt. Carmel high school, the new St. Mary Magdalene's school in Edgewater, the new Annunciation high school, St. Dominic's new grade school, expansion of the Blessed Sacrament school, and the warehouse and expanded office building of the Register.

Among the most discouraging reports is that from St. Dominic's, where some cement retaining walls were the extent of construction before work was stopped. Even the foundations remain to be poured, according to the Dominican Fathers. The North Side parish had hoped to open its new school by Thanksgiving, but there is now little chance that the building will be ready before late spring of 1951. In practically the same situation is the new Mt. Carmel high school. Work had started on the footings and 26 tons of steel and 300 yards of concrete were in place when work was stopped. The Servite Fathers had planned to open the school for the freshman class this fall and the building was supposed to be completed by

Also completely halted is the expansion of Blessed Sacrament school. Foundations and cement forms for the second floor of the new building were completed, according to Monsignor Harold V. Campbell, but steel and brick work cannot progress until carpenters are available. The $275,000 project was started in November and was to be finished by September.

PLASTER WORK is being finished at the new St. Mary Magdalene school, said Monsignor James Flanagan, and there is still hope that the school will greet its first pupils in September. Only about a month's work remains to be completed when all trades are able to work on the building.

June 29, the patronal feast of the new Parish of Sts. Peter and Paul in Wheatridge, was planned as the dedication day for the church by the Rev. Robert McMahon, pastor, but the strike prevented it. The basement church is actually quite near completion. Its cement walls have been poured and some brick work is progressing. The roofing of the structure and the necessary carpentry can be finished quickly. A rectory is also included in the project at Wheatridge.

Plumbers, tile setters, and some other workmen have been at work for the past three weeks at the new Annunciation high school building, where the brick work is done. The building is now ready for roofing, according to Monsignor Hagus, but there is little chance that it will be ready for the fall enrollment.

WALLS OF THE NEW WING at the Cathedral high school are up and the plumbing is completed as far as it can be, but further progress waits the return of the carpenters. Monsignor Canavan is pessimistic over the possibility of opening the addition

The new parish hall at St. Mary's in Littleton had been completed sufficiently for use at the parish bazaar in May. Only some stone work on the exterior and a few odds and ends of the interior remained. The Rev. Frederick McCallin said that all trades returned to work on the building last week, his contractor having made satisfactory arrangements with the unions, and that the building will be entirely finished in about a month,

Pro Ecclesia et Pontifice.

Slim returns on the Little Flower burse being raised for the education of seminarians for the Archdiocese of Denver indicate this week that business is not the only thing affected by the summer slump. In the past month only a little more than $300 has been received for the project planned in honor of the silver jubilee of of the canonization of St. Therese of Lisieux. Sponsors of the burse, however, point out that there are still 11 full weeks remaining before the anniversary date, Oct. 3, and that several large donations or a number of small ones will still insure the completion of the burse by that time.

In the past week four gifts amounting to $56 were received. The contributions came from Mrs. John Zato of Craig, $1; A Friend Denver, $20; Lt. Joan Wissing, Fitzsimons hospital, $10; and Anonymous, Denver, $25.
