Q. Some of the concrete crosses in the World War I veterans section at Greenwood Cemetery have paint peeling off and the names are disappearing.

I called the cemetery office and they told me the number to call, but I can't get any answer.

The crosses really should be fixed up.

Can you help?

A. Action Line contacted the cemetery office and was told the upkeep of the crosses is the responsibility of the American Legion.

It was also reported that the stencils for the names on the crosses may have been misplaced. There are several hundred crosses there.

We then contacted American Legion officers in charge of the project. They plan to make contact with the contractor in charge of painting the crosses, and hopefully will locate the stencils. The names are on file at the cemetery office, in case new stencils must be cut.

The American Legion has a memorial fund, from which payment for painting the crosses are made.

Q. We have been paying $40 a month on a Magnavox television set, put in layaway at a store in the Northgate Shopping Center. We have paid about $500 and have only a few more payments.

We went down to make another payment, and the store was empty. They must have moved, but we can't find out where.

Can you help?
