Rev. Herbert Schuster, C.S. Sp., pastor of the Catholic Church of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, is apparently a vigorous and talented man.

Brick mason, designer, landscape gardener, humanitarian and clergyman, this priest of the order of the Holy Ghost Fathers is a vital part of a thriving Negro parish in North Lake Charles.

"This parish belongs to its people—they have certainly worked for it," says Father Schuster.

"The rectory was built in 1963-64 by professional workers of the parish who offered their services for a fraction of what they make on the job," he explained.

"I dug the foundation for the rectory, laid it, and set the tiles on the floor. I am sometimes called 'the brick-and-mortar priest,'" Father Schuster said.

In addition to helping with the physical labor of construction, Father Schuster aided in designing the rectory. "I've always been interested in building—in color, shape and design," the priest said.

"Landscape gardening is another of my avocations," Father Schuster said. "I recently laid out a landscape design on a section of the church property here."

"A special project of mine is the rodeo sponsored by the church twice yearly. It is a very good show, and it provides funds for the parish," Father Schuster said.

The pastor was named outstanding rodeo promoter of 1964 by the Texas Rodeo Cowboys Association.

"While persons often ask me about attending our rodeo," he said. "I tell them that our colored people want them to attend. The performances are for everyone."

For the past year and a half, Father Schuster and his assistant, Rev. Joseph P. McDonough, have been leaders in a human relations council on racial problems. Members from various churches in the area—both white and colored—meet regularly to discuss racial issues and to work toward solutions.

Father Schuster said that better Negro schools are desperately needed in this area.

When schools graduate inferior teachers, these teachers communicate this inferiority to the next generation of students, and the cycle is repeated, the pastor said. In addition, school officials must provide more classrooms and better facilities, he said.

For harmonious community relations, both whites and Negroes must work hand-in-hand for the betterment of all people, Father Schuster said.

"Negroes must strive for excellence—especially in their children's education," the priest said.

"I tell my people that the granting of equal rights means that they must assume equal responsibilities also," he explained. "If they are granted the right to attend white schools they must accept the responsibility of maintaining good grades."

He added that he did not approve of some of the methods presently being used by civil rights leaders. The solution to the racial problem lies in hard work, not in demonstrations, Father Schuster said.

Father Schuster was ordained into the priesthood 22 years ago. He came to Immaculate Heart of Mary Parish in 1960, succeeding Rev. Harold McNeal, who built the church in 1957-58.

The pastor is proud of the church's school, in which grades one through seven are presently taught. An eighth grade will be added in September, Father Schuster said.

At the present, four nuns of the Blessed Sacrament order and a lay teacher instruct in the school.

Looking to the future, Father Schuster said that a convent for the teaching sisters and an auditorium for the school are slated for construction between 1966 and 1968.
